

“Just in Time”

What do you do when you’re a business owner providing for your family, but health insurance for you isn’t affordable? Where do you go when disaster strikes?

Joe is a longtime business owner who became violently ill with flu-like symptoms, such as fever, headache, nausea, vomiting, and muscle aches; yet had be unable to find someone who could determine why. He was progressively getting worse and could no longer afford another doctor’s office visit or trip to the emergency room, when someone told him the Good Samaritan Clinic might be able to help.

He decided he had nothing to lose, and came for a visit. After being seen by the medical personnel that day, and having a few tests ran, Joe finally had an answer for his illness. He was diagnosed with tick fever. A treatable, yet serious illness if gone untreated. Symptoms from tick fever can begin from 1 day to 3 weeks after the tick bite, so Joe had no idea when it had happened.

The clinic provided him with much needed medical attention and got him back to good health. He now has private health insurance and is successfully able to care for and support his family due to the medical attention he received from the Clinic.
